TicketCity Motto: A Better Experience Lives Here!

TicketCity Mission: To provide the ultimate ticketing experience.

TicketCity provides information about our company so our clients can make an informed choice when buying tickets. Read the information below, and ask yourself why our competitors in the ticket business do not share this type of valuable information? We are proud of our company and the service we provide; we never want anyone to buy tickets at TicketCity without understanding what they are getting.

What TicketCity does:

- We sell tickets for all events. TicketCity has tickets for sold out events and sells premium seats that are the best tickets available.
- Our tickets put our clients in the best seats at the most exciting events in the world. We have tickets for all events but specialize in college sports tickets and championship events like the Masters, Kentucky Derby and US Open.
- We are a ticket broker that sells tickets at market value, not face value. That means our tickets prices are often above face value; although we have plenty of tickets listed at or below face value. Market price is determined by demand for a particular event; hot events can be pricey

The topics below provide information you need to know when buying tickets. We have a ticket glossary available to assist you with industry specific terminology.

What is a Ticket Broker:

A ticket broker is a business that sells tickets at market price. Market price is determined by the demand for a ticket and the price associated with obtaining them. Market price fluctuates, but is often higher than the face value printed on the ticket. There are thousands of businesses that sell tickets but only a few hundred are ticket brokers, and only a handful of those have experience in the ticket industry. TicketCity is one of the largest ticket companies in the world and offers a wide range of services.

Ticket brokers sell tickets to events, and specialize in providing premium tickets or tickets for sold out events. Ticket broker are a service business that save clients time and make buying tickets convenient. TicketCity clients can buy tickets for events that are not available through any other channels like Masters badges and single events that normally require purchasing an entire season or paying expensive donations.

What is the difference between a ticket broker and a scalper? Not much if you ask some people, but the reality is that ticket brokers provide a valuable service. A ticket broker is an established business with a physical location as their office. Brokers provide benefits on par with any business: phone orders, credit card

About Ticketmaster:
Ticketmaster is the largest distributor of tickets in the primary ticket market, their monopoly on the primary space makes them one of the most recognized brands in tickets. Ticketmaster has distribution deals with the venues, performers, teams and promoters to distribute tickets to the general public for events. They are responsible for setting up the initial pre-sale and on-sale date, offering consumers the ability to buy tickets online or by phone, and then printing and distributing the tickets; they also partnered with the venues to allow people to pick-up tickets at will-call. Ticketmaster was owned by IAC (InterActiveCorp), but was spun off in 2008.

Ticketmaster's monopoly spans a wide range of events as they have deals in place with venues for professional sports teams, like the NFL, concert venues and many other multi-use facilities that host events. Ticketmaster also owns Paciolan tickets, which is the largest distributor of tickets for college sports teams and universities. Ticketmaster also acquired ticket broker, Ticketsnow, to increase their presence in the secondary ticket market. They now refer clients who cannot find the tickets they want on the Ticketmaster website to the Ticketsnow site; a practice that has been panned by some concert fans who feels that relationship is driving up the price of tickets. Ticketmaster also has been slammed by consumers for having high service fees and a lack of customer service, even though TM is the primary distributor.

There are some drawbacks, but Ticketmaster is still a good resource to buy concert or event tickets; their inventory spans from the circus to concerts to motorcross racing. We recommend that TicketCity clients buy tickets at face value from TM if the event they want is not sold out or still has good seats

TicketCity owns a huge number of tickets, making our inventory one of the largest in the world. Because of that we are able to offer fantastic specials on many of our seats. We have a large selection of ticket priced at face value, lots of tickets priced below face value, and tons of tickets where the price has been dropped 10% or more from the original ticket prices.

You cannot find the deals we offer on our tickets anywhere else because we own the tickets. Check out our ticket specials to find the best deals in your area. Our ticket specials are updated daily so make sure you keep checking back to see the latest deals.

A large number of our ticket specials come from the many season tickets we own, so look for great deals on College Football, College Basketball, NFL, MLB, and NBA games. We also have specials on Championship Events (such as Kentucky Derby, Super Bowl, US Open Tennis) as well as many great concerts and theatre shows.
